San Francisco (in the Fog)

We had a few great days in the fog in the city by the bay. We didn't know it until we arrived, but August is usually one of the foggiest months in San Fran. The fog rolled in on us like clockwork every evening and stayed until about mid-day. When the sun did break out it was glorious to be eating seafood, strolling the wharf and seafront areas, and searching for good photography overlooks. Anya and I found lots of really nice photo spots and two of them are pictured here. Above is the Bay Bridge with a foggy San Francisco in the background. This photo was taken from Yerba Buena Island and I used a variable neutral density filter to get my shutter speed to around 5 seconds in order to blur out the vehicles. Below is of course, the Golden Gate Bridge. It was taken from the Marin Headlands area, at dusk with city lights in the distance. The next day we had the awesome experience of walking across this historic American landmark. We hope all is well, we're headed north.
